3. Independent Assessment: Community Briefings, Proposed Refinements

Rob Davis presented an overview of the changes made to the assessment report, resulting from the outreach and engagement with stakeholders. On behalf of the Hillard Heintz team, Mr. Davis expressed appreciation to the Steering Committee, community participants, and staff supporting the assessment. Mr. David added that the level of community engagement in this work underscored the high level in interest in helping the Police Department move forward.

Q. In the report, we compare Salem with outcomes of other departments. Did you look at Eugene's mobile crisis response called CAHOOTS?

A. It is challenging to do that kind of comparison because Eugene has so many more pieces of the puzzle in place, which is part of what helps it be so successful. We understand that there is interest in Salem on working toward a mobile crisis response.

The group reflected on their interest in remaining connected to this work.

- There is a violent history of policing. I want to see an experience the change. We want to be involved and see relationships built, and see the collaboration happen.
- The assessment process was good. Engagement was good. I'm concerned the reception to the assessment has not been as good. With the headline focus on staffing, I see people already starting to dismiss it.
- In Portland, the report coming out is out of synch with the community they're protecting. We don't have that as much here but, we do have growing concerns about activity at Bush Park.
- I'm looking forward to the work on the recommendations and how we hold each other accountable.
- So many in our community are ready to help with actionable strategies from this work so that we can evolve together, with everyone at the table. We need to show this assessment matters.

4. Steering Committee Letter of Introduction

Steering Committee members asked staff to replace "audit" with "independent assessment" in the draft Steering Committee letter.

5. Next Steps

Chair Sherwood read the six key assessment questions into the record and invited Chief Womack to review next steps for the Salem Police Department in implementing the recommendations.

Chief Womack led off his remarks with appreciation for the work of Steering Committee and Hillard Heintz, and how well community voices were incorporated. Chief Womack shared a written response to findings and recommendations within the assessment. In the near-term, working through recommended actions in the assessment around improving recruitment, training, accountability and documenting procedures. By January, the Salem Police Department will have a strategic plan, new goals and objectives with measurable outcomes to gauge our progress and hold each other accountable.

Chair Sheerwood directed Steering Committee members to the draft Steering Committee cover letter in the packet. Chair Sherwood made a motion to approve the Independent Assessment of April 22, 2021 to include the Steering Committee cover letter.
